

The invention includes a microsphere comprising styrene-glycidyl methacrylate polymer, and methods for isolation, purification and identification of receptors to a specific compound possessing physiological activity. In addition, the invention provides proteins isolated and purified using the microspheres of the invention.

The invention includes a microsphere comprising styrene-glycidyl methacrylate polymer, and methods for isolation, purification and identification of receptors to a specific compound possessing physiological activity. In addition, the invention provides proteins isolated and purified using the microspheres of the invention.